"No Safer Place Than Mother's Arms We believed their words, "Wraps and slings are safe" And carefully placed him at her breast. She walked our girls into school, Total, twenty minutes had passed. He nursed for ten & stroked her chest, And then he went to sleep. Three minutes more passed-and he was quiet. Resting solemnly in peace. Her arms were free to do good works. As the kids filed in To say the pledge of Allegiance. That's how her days begin. She stood among proud parents Like so many times before. Chatting and smiling as she stood In the second row. Looked down to see him sleeping Snuggling at her breast, No way she could have known Next breath would be his last. No one can blame her THEY LIE, "WRAPS and SLINGS ARE SAFE". The profits are more important to them Than our sons smiling face. SO HEED THIS FINAL WARNING, TAKE THE ADVICE I GIVE. NO

I met Delwin today as he came into my place of employment and during a short conversation the loss of his son was brought into topic. I was so taken aback I couldn't think and all the things I wanted to say were frozen. I did a little research and found this page. I am a mother of two very small children and I could not imagine the rest of my life breathing without them. You are two of the strongest people! I admire your strength. I admire your hearts as they continue to beat through your loss and grows with love for your beautiful children and strengthens the bond between each other as husband and wife. I will continue to pray for your healing.
